Women’s Action for Change was founded by a group of diverse local women in 1993 who identified a need for community based, participative work in women and human rights in Fiji, and who wished to work using the arts. Many of the women had been part of the beginnings of the Fiji Women’s Rights Movement and Fiji Women’s Crisis Centre. It is a feminist and human rights collective, and is a registered community non-profit organisation. WAC produces annual reports which are annually audited. WAC receives very limited core/operational funding and run multiple programmes with very low overheads, and very committed, experienced local staff.

E.5.1. 2. COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT INITIATIVE FOUNDATION

CDI Foundation is a non-profit Trust Fund existing under the laws of Papua New Guinea representing an emerging concept for addressing social change and development. It is primarily supported by corporations in the petroleum industry to build the capacity of rural communities in the provinces which these companies have invested to address social needs of these communities. The CDI Foundation builds upon community development initiatives originally carried out by a consortium of oil companies in the Southern Highlands and Gulf Provinces of PNG since construction of the oilfield and pipeline facilities commenced there in 1990. After ten years of lessons learned, the oil companies had identified a number of limitations to their efforts in implementing these initiatives and determined that supporting a separate, sustainable NGO would be a more effective means of facilitating development in the area.

E.5.1. 3. HELP RESOURCES

HELP is an acronym denoting our commitment to committing human and technical resources to achieve Health, Education, Livelihood and Participation for all. HELP Resources is a local NGO, with a focus on rural and grassroots communities. HELP Resources is well networked across Papua New Guinea, the Pacific Region and globally. HELP Resources acts locally and thinks globally. The goal and objectives of HELP Resources reflect the fundamental principles of Constitution of Papua New Guinea as well as PNG’s current commitments to global development goals and conventions. Its current major programs include Information and Communication (IAC) and Community Training and Capacity Building (CTCB).

E.5.1. 4. KUP WOMEN FOR PEACE (KWP)
Kup Women for Peace are working to address issues of tribal fighting and violence against women and to build peace among tribal groups in the PNG Highlands. The Kup district is a comparatively undeveloped area in Simbu Province in the rugged PNG Highlands. Tribal fighting in recent years has severely damaged development in the area. Women from four rival tribal groups in Kup came together following this devastating breakout of violence and formed the group, Kup Women for Peace, with the intention of Downim heavy belong all mama (reducing the sorrow of the mothers) by putting a stop to tribal war and promoting peaceful development.

E.5.1. 5. LAE CATHOLIC FAMILY LIFE
Lae Catholic Family Life works with victims of domestic violence, rape and other offences. The group equips Catholic mothers and young Catholic women with the necessary information regarding families, their communities, and the social issues affecting women today, so that with the information and skills they receive through the various programs, they can be independent, rather than rely completely on their husbands. They learn to earn for themselves and contribute positively to their families, communities, parishes and to the whole society.

E.5.1. 7. Meri I Kirap Sapotim (MIKS)
MIKS is working to increase women’s participation in decision-making but also challenging deep-rooted attitudes and barriers that prevent women from holding a position of power in the local tribal councils and in national government. The group are promoting the right of women to claim their stake as equal partners in nation building.
The group aims to help people, and women in particular, realise what they can and should expect from a democratic system, otherwise people will continue to be victims of a system of governance that is both inaccessible and indifferent to the majority of the population of PNG.

E.5.1. 9. WOMEN AND CHILDREN'S SUPPORT CENTRE (LAE)
The Women and Children's Support Centre’s goal is to have a centre for those who have sexual abused, especially women and children, to come for counselling and decide what would be the next step for them to take, whether through counseling, legal action, etc. It is now becoming a norm that many women and children are sexually abused. The Centre advocates to grassroots women through forums and community awareness on basic rights, amended laws, as well as assisting in assuring that offenders are persecuted. One of the Centre's goals is also to hold trainings for police and local level government on crimes and human rights.

WOMEN’S VOICE Transcript

Women’s Voice is a grassroots organisation. It evolved from the needs of the urban poor in the slums and the women involved in unorganized sections of labour in Bangalore city in the state of Karnataka. It is a platform for disadvantaged women to come together and share their problems and experiences, highlighting important social issues and injustices committed against them. The organisation has grown steadily over the past 20 years, from representing 85 women in 11 slums in 1980 to widespread membership of over 10,000 covering 88 units around Bangalore. It has its representation in the Karnataka States Commission for women.

Notes of Ruth Manorama’s Interview (Women’s Voice)
Interviewed by Jyoti Patil (Aalochana)
On: 26.3.2006
At: Women’s Voices, Bangalore
(These notes were taken as the tape recorder did not work.)

W: Will you tell us something about the women’s voices – when was it started, its aims and objectives, mission?

A: See we started some twenty years back as a grass roots organisation, essentially to address the needs of the urban poor in Bangalore and that of women working in the unorganized sector. So if you see the material that I gave you, women’s voices speaks for itself. So we work in the slums of Bangalore city. It’s a platform for the women to come together – disadvantaged women, and share their problems and experiences. We have a representation in Karnataka State Commission for women. Actually you will get all the information in those papers.

A: Will you elaborate on the nature of your work?

W: We work for the better future for the slum dwellers, where problems like alcoholism, violence against women, unsanitary conditions prevail. Basically people there live in de-humanizing conditions. So we work to improve the quality of life for these people. Its things like justice, fair wages, health, awareness, and education – so many things.

We work towards empowering women and poor. Women of the poorer section get mobilized, educated therefore they could claim their rights, workout their livelihood.

We also feel that poorer women need justice, dignity and participate in decision-making and also the leadership. They are basically women from poorer classes, who never went to school, ones without information. It grew from the needs of 85 women from 11 slums of Bangalore, in 1980, who shared their day-to-day problems and felt the need to be organized.

One of the things we thought was information is knowledge. Knowledge is power. Our organisation gives information. Slums of Bangalore, language if different, caste, , class are different, Diverse groups.

How diverse groups can live in harmony together free from violence at all places? Is what we try - It believes in democracy from below. It should be an upward movement. WE felt providing platform for these poorer women to share their concerns to be very important. Transformation of society where class, caste, gender discrimination are over done – its an effort to create a class less, caste less, gender equal society.
A - How does Women's Voices look at feminism, how do you define it?

W - We feel feminism cannot go ahead unless and until we link patriarchy with cast and class differences. We also felt women needed to get together and build alliances with other progressive groups.

Feminism term is adopted in a very western context. Even poorer class have their own tradition of subjugation. Even the marginalized society though they have very equal behavior but they too follow patriarchy. For them day to day struggle is crucial. Day to day existentialism is very important for the poor women. Economic deprivation – how do you link it up this economic deprivation with feminism? We should be talking about all kinds of inequalities. So I feel the poor and the marginalized should become part of this feminist dialogue.

It is not homogenous. It is diverse, heterosexual. The experience of diverse groups like dalits, urban poor will also contribute. This distinct and diverse expression of feminism is yet to come up. Truly the dalit – 90% of women in women's voices are dalit women. Feminism becomes very important component, becomes very encompassing component of marginalized groups. Because they really look for equality. Feminism is more dear to the underdogs, because it talks about equality, non discrimination, participation of all women. There is no hierarchy – neither in the issue nor about who is the leader.

Issues of slums women are seen as slum women issues – it did not occur as feminist issue. So if feminism has to become the vanguard of the feminist revolutionary thinking then it has to come from the grassroots.

For me dealing with dowry issue is as important as dealing with water issue. Dealing with sexuality is as important as dealing with the protection of women.

So then, so called class issues have to be merged into feminist movement. Feminist is socialist, is equality of identity, self determinism, self autonomy.

A: So the organisation essentially works in the slums right? So how does it actually function in these slums – do you have your regular staff going there?

W – It is very difficult to operate or function in the slums, because there are diverse groups, with different economic backgrounds, religion, cast, class etc. So uniting them on one single issue is a challenge. In 1980 when we first started our work we approached the women and started communicating with them. We held regular meetings, so a bond was created. Initially some of our volunteers were accused of enticing women to go against Kuran etc. But then slowly the trust was built. So we have these people who go and work at the community level in the slums. Slowly water problems were solved, anganwadis were started. Over the years various issues of women were brought forward – dowry deaths, gang rape.

Now actually poverty makes you powerless. Women's economic development gives them dignity, greater ability to choice making. So it was a long process. Women slowly realized. There are many strategic issues involved in women's empowerment.
A - What were the tools of communication you used in this process?

W - Banners, posters, leaflets, handbills, puppetry, song, street plays, meetings, conventions, games … there has been all of it. By constantly sitting and talking to them. Language is important. The slums in which we work there are different language speaking groups. Then being able to converse in local kannada language – that is very important. By talking, through dialogue, lectures we involve them. They participate in rallies, mochas, in trainings. We communicate through issues eg . Water is an issue, so you inform them about how the water is being sold. So we develop a philosophy through issues. Handbills, videos, audio, cultural forms are all used to reach out.

A: And what have you found more effective?

W: Cultural programme as well as community meetings are very effective as you can have dialogue, it is more participatory. Public meetings after which people respond to us and dialogue with us are also very important. One to one communication is very important. And see most of the people we work with are illiterate so talking to them helps. Then it is important to build a direct contact.

A - What about Internet, radio, TV, or videos?

W: We intend to use community radio. Internet is for communication with other NGOs etc. E - Campaigns. Videos we do use. Programmes happen on the radio. So we want to explore community radio. We have not trained women in technology. It is going to benefit us. We are not going to be subordinated by the technology.

A: What is your notion of empowerment?

W: Empowerment has to come from below, it comes through knowledge, information, from understanding ideologies, when you know things, you make a difference. Urban poor, backward class women, widows, single women, transgender women, women in prostitution, from the unorganized sector -Because they don’t have information neither through formal education nor through paper and other medium. Because they don’t have information they are backward. It is because they do not know they cannot voice their opinions, they don’t have any opinion.

A Do you follow any conscious communication strategy?

W: That depends on the issue. Public meetings require lot of people to listen to you. According to the nature of issues tool would be decided. If it’s a small group then we discuss, for larger group it would be different.

Every time new people join. So the information has to be repeated. So recording comments, information helps. Our group is not literate. They cannot read or write. So we have to talk, act or sing for them. We have to be more elaborate.

Lots of background information has to be given as our groups do not read newspapers, they do know the issues. But now due to electronic media they are better informed. But still we have to go a long way.

It depends on situations. For eg. When the government ordered slum demolition, we sent some 1000 telegrams to the Chief minister and finally supreme court stopped the demolition. We took out a procession through the city to publicize the “struggle for Survival” as part of the international year of shelter. So this works differently.
We had a signature campaign, a massive signature campaign demanding a proper rationing system and increased kerosene quota. We actually tackled the food and fuel issue with this campaign.

We run grievance cells where in counseling, legal aid is provided to women subjected to violence. That becomes a place to interact, discuss, and create awareness.

A : What kind of information is empowering and do you think a tool per say empowers.

W : Empowering information is that which helps people lead their day to day struggles – information on various government schemes, programmes, policies, that help in day to day existence – ration card. That which helps them meet their practical need. Information on macro policies, micro policies help them to have global perspective. So they know how it affects their lives. This information on analysis, on perspective, keeps the movement alive. Legal information, we have seminars, to give information about what is latest thing, of the government legislation, world conferences. Women come to at least our meetings regularly, have latest information.

We even give information about UN. Treaty, women’s conferences.

A: What are the difficulties you encounter while communicating with your audience? Do you make use of the mainstream media?

W: Most important is language. You simply cannot work if you do not the language your groups speak. One has to appreciate small nuances of the spoken language. That is what brings you closer to your audience. Then illiteracy. See it is all linked to class and caste. The poorest of the poor are the one which belong lowest class, they are the ones who have been denied access to education and hence to sources of livelihood. So how do you give them the information? It is always a challenge. So that is why talking – we prefer one to one communication.

Mainstream media is used for advocacy and all. It is sad that still the voices of the marginalized do get voiced in the mainstream media.
